Acknowledgements

So, this is that part of the book where we thank everyone who helped make this book possible - all the people, such as our families and friends, who put up with the periods of abandonment and the zombie-like behavior when we were around. We're highly appreciative of the support in listening to our obsessive and endless discussions, as well as allowing us to use them as lab rats in our experiments.

This book was made possible by an endless supply of coffee. Well, for Jeanette that is. Andrea only drinks hot chocolate.

We would also like to say "Thank you!" to you, the reader. We're grateful you found our book worth reading, even if most of it was "borrowed" from other sources. While there may not be 100% original concepts in this book, we hope that you benefit from our efforts to compile the best information from the best sources. On that note, we would also like to say that we're appreciative of the staff at Google for making our research easier than wading through encyclopedias.

Finally, our acknowledgements wouldn't be complete if we didn't thank our critics - all the people who thought we were crazy; to the ones who said we weren't qualified to write this book; and to those who doubted our ability to follow through. Thank You for giving us the motivation to prove you wrong. We did it. 😊

We hope you all enjoy what we've written here. Please join us in discussion at our website www.lazy-girl-guide.com.

Thank you for choosing this (mini) capsule wardrobe!

It's our hope that by using this capsule, you will feel more put together, spend less time deciding what to wear, spend less time doing laundry and spend less money on clothes that don't work for you.

Description of this Capsule:

The Work Wear Essentials (mini) is an abbreviated version of the full capsule wardrobe plan. You may notice the lack of color in this capsule. That's because it's centered around a more formal, polished look for work and includes only the basics. The full capsule does have color included – or if black, white and gray are more your thing, you can substitute pieces to compliment your personality. All the pieces in this capsule came from Land's End at www.landsend.com.
